The deadline to apply for spring semester is Friday, January 19th. For fall semester applications, the deadline is Friday, March 2nd.Q: What is the correct way to place a subject in the middle of the sentence? I wrote the below sentence. Is it grammatically correct? When reading the article, I realised that I don't like him. A: Your "sentence" is grammatically correct. But I don't think your meaning is what you hope for. Your example could be rephrased (and I'm not sure that's what you meant): I read the article and realize that I don't like him. If your original intention was to talk about what you read, rather than what you realized, then I think that might be more interesting and more grammatically valid: I read the article and realized that I don't like him. Alternatively, if you wanted to use "him" as a means of changing your narrator's viewpoint, then you might phrase it this way: I read the article, and I realized that I don't like him. But I think I would phrase it this way: I realized that I didn't like him. Specialization and Grouping This example uses the special page feature to divide a page into two sections with a space between them. The sections are indicated by two color sections, left and right. The actual section/colors are defined in the user style file which sets section headings and special section colors and offsets. The page style file specifies that section headings should be displayed in pale pink and other section headings in blue with a break in between. The color section is next to the border of a section in the document to help the user see
