

Q: jquery.on not working .on('click', '.item', function(){ // clicked item code here... }); I have the following code, which works fine on one page, but not when I deploy it to another page. It doesn't even bother to fire the code. It is as if it never got inside the.on() event handler at all. I also am using the latest version of JQuery on both pages. If you need more of the code I can add it, but I believe I need to add it to the JQuery part, not the HTML, since the code I need is loaded from an external server, so it doesn't know about the.html() that I have added to the page. The parent page includes the following HTML code: $(function() { //some code here }); I have tried running it in both the root of the page, and in the header section using inline code. It seems like the problem lies in the fact that I am loading the files from an external server, but I have no idea how to make it work on the other page. A: The.on() method needs to have a selector that applies to all the elements which you want to attach the event listener, not an individual element. Try changing.on() to.on('click', '.item') in your code. High selective RGD-CNTs conjugates and their efficient optical activation for efficient cell detachment from three dimensional cancer culture. A strong selective cell detachment from 3D cancer cell culture is vital to cancer studies. Here we describe the usage of Rhodamine-labeled carbon nanotubes (R-CNTs) for selective cell detachment from three-dimensional (3D) cancer cell culture. We demonstrate that the rhodamine fluorophore is ideal for cell detachment experiments because of its strong fluorescence properties, and its elimination is convenient using conventional dyes.
