The iPhone and iPad offer a number of computer-related apps that enable you to work with images, even those that you import from your camera. With these apps, you can store images and do basic editing, such as cutting, pasting, cropping, and much more. You can even do basic retouching and color correction. Just be aware that the capabilities of these apps vary widely, and you must be sure to use a real computer when you access an app that should require full-powered computing power. Figure 7-13: The base version of Photoshop Express is free. Editing. The general purpose of editing is to modify an image to change or alter it in some way. In real estate, this might be all about fixing lighting problems. Perhaps you removed an object or person from a photo you'd taken and just want the image to be returned to its original state. Maybe you added a background (or removing it) or corrected a color. Maybe you added details to the image and made it more pleasing to the eye. In any case, you're editing to change an image. Image editors frequently feature a brush. A brush adds a soft shadow, tone, or texture to an image. Image editing software usually comes with a wide range of editing tools. Because the Photoshop Express software allows you to download images from your Facebook or Flickr accounts, you can quickly get started editing your images on the go. Retouching. After you've tweaked an image, you may want to retouch the image. Retouching is the term for correcting or enhancing an image's complexion. This might involve fixing a fly in the shot, removing blemishes, and so on. A number of sites and apps offer "advanced" features for retouching or skin-flattering portraits. Glamour Shots' Glamorama retouches can correct skin problems, such as discoloration and skin-sagging from weight problems. Glamour Shots has a strong line of products for digital retouching and is sold in hundreds of physical locations and on the web. Their products are available in person, online, or through the iPhone/iPad app store. Glamour Shots' products are sold through national retailers such as Walmart, Best Buy, CVS, and Walgreens, as well as many large retail chains. For more information, visit glamourshots.com. The purpose of this proposal is to support a unique educational opportunity for students interested in professional development in gerontology. The Gerontology and Geriatric Medicine Fellowship Program at the University of Minnesota will offer a 3-year training program, which includes a 3-month geriatrics clerkship. This clerkship will be directed by faculty members in geriatric medicine and will be complemented by an institutional gerontology course. The curriculum will be developed by gerontology faculty from across the campus. Each year of the program will be evaluated by a faculty-based committee who will rate the educational effectiveness of the program and make recommendations for future improvement. Graduates of this program will be able to provide primary care to aging patients and to initiate and conduct research on issues of importance to the aging population. During the course of the fellowship, the trainee will develop the following skills: 1) the ability to teach the principles of medical gerontology and the skills of medical interviewing to older patients and to apply these skills in the delivery of medical care; 2) knowledge and skills in patient self-administration and assessment; 3) increased knowledge of longitudinal studies of aging; 4) research skills in selecting gerontological topics for investigation; and 5) the ability to educate colleagues in gerontological research and to assume a position as a faculty member in a gerontology-based department. Hyaluronate-induced apoptosis is mediated through TNF-alpha signaling and AMPK activation, but not through caspase-3. Hyaluronan (HA), an abundant glycosaminoglycan in the extracellular matrix, plays important roles in cancer cell motility and invasion, and is also involved in cell apoptosis. This study was undertaken to test the hypothesis that HA-induced apoptosis involves signaling through the tumor necrosis factor-alpha (TNF-alpha) receptor, and to determine the role of the serine/threonine kinase AMPK in these events. Apoptosis was measured using Annexin-V-FITC staining, and intracellular levels of TNF-alpha and interleukin (IL)-1alpha were measured by ELISA. Western blotting and reverse transcriptase-polymerase chain reaction were used to detect protein expression and mRNA level, respectively. The kinetics of the intracellular signaling events induced by HA on TNF-alpha-pretreated cells were also analyzed. Pretreatment of A549 cells with HA induced a dose- and time
