vDash is an application that enables to customize the gauge and switch display themes for SeaGauge equipment. In addition the application can also act as an NMEA 2000 viewer that permits you to change the way the data is displayed, so that you can analyze the parameters you are interested in a more convenient manner. The program comes with a user-friendly, yet rugged and outdated single-screen interface that displays the data on the left and a panel that enables you to activate switch relays, an option that can be enabled if you have the vSwitch module installed on the vGauge Remove unit. In the eventuality that you are connecting the NMEA gadget, then you will be happy to learn that the configuration can be summarized to specifying the port the data arrives on. You can rest assured that the application decides the information and places the data in a way that is easy to read on the display. It is worth mentioning that the utility can adapt to your device's sensors or senders specific to your device. If you would like to monitor the engine performance directly from your computer via a Bluetooth wireless interface and display the data more intuitively, then perhaps vDash might be the tool to try out. Another case of atypical presentation of breast cancer: a rare case of ductal carcinoma in situ and salivary duct carcinoma. Salivary duct carcinoma (SDC) is a rare tumor of the salivary glands. In the head and neck, it usually arises from the parotid gland. We report a case of a 33-year-old woman with a unique presentation of breast ductal carcinoma in situ (DCIS) and SDC in the breast. The patient presented with a painless, hard, right breast mass, which was palpable, movable and non-tender. A diagnosis of breast cancer was made by fine needle aspiration cytology and core needle biopsy. The presence of a ductal proliferation with a nuclear grade of 2 and a few scattered single cells with scanty clear cytoplasm was also noted. SDC with a background of DCIS was also seen. Immunohistochemistry for p63 showed strong positivity in the epithelial cells lining the ductal structures. A diagnosis of
