Compatibility. The European commissioner for consumer protection, Günther Oettinger, today (18 December) proposed a total ban on the sale of advertising on junk foods. Advertising would only be permitted if it meets strict scientific criteria and encourages a healthy lifestyle, Oettinger said in a statement. "It would be possible to adapt advertising for example to provide accurate information or to make links between unhealthy foods and mental illness," he said. The commissioner's recommendation follows a directive published last October which set out a series of six tests for advertisers. The six criteria are related to product differentiation, consumer interest, product reputation and influence, responsible communication, health-related issues, and quality and sustainability. Under the tests, a product would be considered unhealthy only if it meets three out of six criteria or if two of the six criteria are met and consumers are exposed to the advertising “over and over again”.

The commission has found, however, that the tests are vague and fail to take into account that advertising is often the first thing the consumer sees when purchasing a product. ‘Failing test’

The commission’s secretary general, Olivier Jager, said that advertising on soft drinks, chocolate, non-alcoholic and alcoholic drinks, and biscuits and confectionery is not currently under scrutiny. Jager explained that consumers regularly see products advertised on TV, but few see direct product advertising such as an advertisement on a street poster. “This point is a major failing of the tests,

The association between serum levels of insulin-like growth factor-I (IGF-I), brain-derived neurotrophic factor (BDNF) and insulin-like growth factor binding protein-3 (IGFBP-3), or inflammatory markers, C-reactive protein (CRP) and soluble intercellular adhesion molecule-1 (sICAM-1), was investigated in healthy children and children with either type I or type II diabetes. Fourteen healthy children and 14 diabetic children (nine with insulin-dependent diabetes mellitus, three with non-insulin-dependent diabetes mellitus and two with chronic pancreatitis) between the ages of 1 month and 12 years (mean age 3.3+/-3.1 years) were included in this study. After 12 h of fasting, blood samples were obtained for serum analysis of IGF-I, IGFBP-3, BDNF and CRP (by an enzyme immunoassay, ELISA). A similar procedure was employed for the determination of sICAM-1. Children with diabetes were found to have significantly lower IGF-I levels, higher CRP values and increased sICAM-1 levels. There was no significant difference in either IGFBP-3 or BDNF levels between healthy and diabetic children. There was no significant correlation between the concentrations of the individual factors in healthy children. There
