if you're going to be using a computer or mobile device at a public place, such as a coffee shop, consider downloading an app or browser add-on that allows you to control your device from a distance. for example, a well-known browser add-on called ghostery will block tracking scripts and then send you a notification when a website starts tracking you. similarly, if you have an ios device, you can use the app called privacy badger to block trackers and other forms of online advertising. there are other apps that allow you to take control of your web browser, such as ask. if you are using public computers, be careful what you do and who you share your passwords and other private information with. if you are not careful, anyone who finds your log-in information can have access to your account, including your email, personal information, financial data, and other personal information. public computers, such as those at your school, library, bank, or coffee shop, are not secure. anyone can log in to them with your username and password, says the us-cert. in the past, the most dangerous information to share was your log-in information for your bank accounts. however, the recent emphasis on online banking by thieves has shifted to credit cards and passwords, explains the us-cert. if you use public computers, it is best to log in to your accounts as infrequently as possible. you can use a different browser, use a separate computer, or use a password manager to help you create strong and unique passwords for every account. in addition to creating strong passwords, make sure you don't use the same one for multiple accounts, adds the us-cert. you can also avoid using your username and password on websites you visit by using security keys, such as fingerprint readers or smart cards that are more secure than passwords because they require something you own rather than something you know. using a security key is also more secure than using a password on your computer, says the us-cert. twitter: uscert.gov

good password hygiene is important, but sometimes there are password recovery tools that allow you to recover your account if you forget your password. these tools are often referred to as password recovery tools. a password recovery tool is a program that can retrieve a forgotten password for a windows-based computer or mac os. these tools are often used to recover a forgotten password or access a forgotten account on windows-based computers. they generally work by searching through the computer for user data based on the information entered. this is quite different from when hackers and identity thieves try to guess passwords by trying out possible combinations of information. when hackers and identity thieves try to guess passwords, they use computers that are connected to the internet in order to try to "crack" a password..if you use a password recovery tool, you are telling the tool what kind of data to look for. the tool is not the problem—the password recovery tool is. your first line of defense is to never use the same password on multiple services, and to use strong passwords on these services, explains james coram in an article for technet magazine. twitter: technetmag this is the first of a series of articles on the importance of protecting your personal information, and to use these tips to help you keep your passwords, financial, and other personal information safe and protected from outside intruders. it is important to recognize that privacy settings are not a silver bullet for privacy protection, but they can and should help you increase the control you have over how your personal information is handled online, such as what information an organization collects and who can see what you post, advises the office of the privacy commissioner of canada. twitter: privacyprivee 5ec8ef588b
