a new regulatory framework, originally put in place in 2016, is now giving regulators, banks, supervisors, the markets, and shareholders a better regulatory footing. a tighter regulatory framework and increased transparency will provide more stability for banks, but increase their costs. these will be borne by shareholders, as well as by more operational costs. banks with best returns by 2020 and 2021 will have a clear target to meet. banks that have capacity to generate good returns by 2020 and 2021 but are not yet delivering them will be the new industry optimists with the best chance to prove that their good returns are sustainable. the best return achievers will be the leaders in their respective industries. their track records will become more clear, and they will likely need to scale up, and rein in their balance sheet buildups. in many ways, the 2020 market will be easier than the 2021 market. the (mostly) safe assets will not become more volatile, which will help banks with high market exposures. the spread of macroeconomic uncertainty will be more limited. the impact of ongoing coronavirus will be smaller, with some of the contagion having already run its course. markets will be more forgiving of recent balance sheet buildups, and of bankers' reticence to write down assets. leverage ratios by 2020, 2021, and 2022 will be more determined by better fundamentals than by margin-improving maneuvers. there will be a gradual correction of credit spreads, more damaging to regional banks and the large banks with more exposure in the regions, than to regional and foreign banks with more domestic coverage. by 2020 and 2021, the u.s. banks will be the best served, and the european, emerging, and pacific banks will be most harmed. although the threat of a new crisis will haunt the u. banks and the large banks in europe, the pacific region, and the emerging market banks will have more to fear. the challenge is how to offset the hard positions that they should take on balance sheets and liquidity.

tensorflow in this case enables us to train a classifier to identify proteins or protein fragments. it is crucial to combine this with computing a new, unseen test set to measure the generalisation performance of the trained network. again, this can be done using tensorflow. but even those high performers face challenges. as deposit amounts have returned to the historical median, they have to grow higher to generate the same roe. equally important to the ability to generate profit is the ability to absorb losses, which hasn't been a problem. rather than just being a cyclical variable, the current virus is likely to have a lasting impact on the performance of the average bank. the pandemic may lead to regulatory and market changes that are disruptive in both the short and long term. compliance with new standards by 2020, all of the major european financial conglomerates will be required to ensure that their transactions on "dark pools" are traded through "clearing houses," or exchanges that meet a new set of regulations. the objective of the alternative trading system, or "ats" directive, is to harmonize the standards of the different nations (and therefore the financial conglomerates) and ensure that they have access to a consistent market structure. the goal is to make the banking sector more efficient, more competitive, and more transparent. banks must comply with the new standards by 2020, all of the major european financial conglomerates will be required to ensure that their transactions on "dark pools" are traded through "clearing houses," or exchanges that meet a new set of regulations. the objective of the alternative trading system, or "ats" directive, is to harmonize the standards of the different nations (and therefore the financial conglomerates) and ensure that they have access to a consistent market structure. the goal is to make the banking sector more efficient, more competitive, and more transparent. 5ec8ef588b
