A bit different than a virtual piano (which we covered last week), KEYMACRO is a MIDI controller that enables you to actually play a virtual piano from your keyboard using nothing more than MIDI. It works perfectly with macOS, Windows, and Linux, and is compatible with both USB and Bluetooth MIDI keyboards. The controller actually works by sending MIDI messages via a USB connection or via Bluetooth, and it's powered either via USB or by batteries. It's easy to set up and uses a simple user interface. There are several different modes that you can use, with different actions at different times. The Piano mode allows you to play virtual piano, the Keyboard mode allows you to send several different types of MIDI messages, and the Syth Mode makes it possible to write symphonies or use a MIDI sequencer. KEYMACRO costs $39.99 and comes with a full 30 day trial, with a 30 day money-back guarantee in case you don't like it. Website Price: $39.99 The app is called Audie and it allows you to listen to more than 200,000 music tracks through the use of some of your favorite streaming services, such as Spotify, Deezer, Google Play Music, Apple Music, Amazon Music, TuneIn, Rhapsody, SoundCloud, and more. However, Audie also has some cool features that allow users to get their creative side going, including a built-in MIDI and virtual piano tool. Audie's built-in MIDI keyboard The app's main purpose is to help you choose what song to listen to, which means that you should use it in conjunction with your streaming service of choice. The main problem we found with Audie is that not all the apps work perfectly, and there are certain songs that aren't available on some of the major streaming services. Still, we think the app is a great addition to your computer, and it works perfectly as a music-playing app on your Mac or PC. Audie is a very solid app with many cool features that you may want to take a closer look at. Keyboard Mode The first thing you should do when you fire up this app is turn on the MIDI tool and then select the MIDI Key mode (or use the keyboard shortcut, CTRL+K). It's a full virtual piano and in order to play any song, simply press the keys on the keyboard using your mouse or trackpad, and 2edc1e01e8
